

Sheyla Hershey goes after World Biggest Breasts

Big implants in Florida

A Houston woman says she is proud to be in Brazil's version of the Guinness Book of World Records for the largest breast implants.

Sheyla Hershey, 28, has undergone surgery eight times to accommodate her FFF implants, which is equal to two quarts of silicone in each breast. She reportedly said: "I think big boobies look beautiful. I am just following my dream and I won't let anyone stop me." Sheyla, who lives in Texas, and is married to Derek, an American, plans to fly back to her native Brazil to get the op done. She cannot get them enlarged in the US because there are laws which limit the amount of silicone a person can have in each breast - making it illegal for her to have another op there. Dr Robert Rey, plastic surgeon to the stars allegedly warned her: "Your breasts could literally burst." Hershey said she gets frustrated when people laugh at her. She says this is her dream and she wished people would be more accepting.

"I want to look better each day, every day. Everybody's got a dream inside, you know? And, it's good when you can make your dream come true," Hershey said.

The mother and housewife said she still isn't satisfied with her implants and wants them even bigger, but getting implants larger is not an option in Texas. The limit in Texas is 1,000 cubic centimeters of silicone in each breast.

Silicone breast implants were developed in Houston nearly 50 years ago.
